Use Case 4: Selection Process

Once a user is logged in and has selected their location, they can search events in the area. To begin the search process, users will select an event/activity category from a list of popular keywords searched in that location. Once a user selects a keyword, they will be able to see a list of activities in that area related to this keyword. In order to see results more specific to the users wants, they will be able to filter these events by category (ie: Dining, shopping, entertainment, etc.) and price point (inexpensive, moderate, expensive). If a user has already visited a location, they will be able to indicate that It has already been visited. Additionally, if a user wishes to learn more about the activity, they can click on the activity and be redirected to the Yelp or TripAdvisor webpage about this event.
